Dear Ms Griffin,

Thanks so much for your reply to our letter in search of information regarding the site we referred to as "L.J. Gray's Dream".

Our reference for that site came from the book Amazing America, by Jane and Michael Stern (Random House, 1978, p. 20).

In that book, they describe:

Along the narrow road north of Sedgewick sits a green-and-grey mobile home. It belongs to L.J. Gray...The expansive yard in front of his home is covered with more lawn ornaments, gew-gaws, doodads and gizmos than you'll find on most miniature golf courses...A sign on the front labels it all as 'Gray's Dream'.."

Could you check again and see if it's still there? We document information on sites like this throughout America, and would like to be certain that this listing is correct.

Thank you for your response to this request.

Sincerely,

R. Sue Smith
Administrative Assistant
